Contributors

Veronica Azcue Castillón is Associate Professor of Spanish in the Department of Spanish at St. Louis University, Madrid Campus. She specializes in modern and contemporary Spanish theater and is the author of El drama de honor ante el siglo XX.

Martha Bátiz holds a PhD in Spanish and Portuguese from the University of Toronto. She is the author of the novel Boca de lobo. Her articles, chronicles, reviews and short stories have appeared in diverse newspapers and magazines in Spain, Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico, Peru and Canada. In December 2005, she was awarded the SOMOS Latin American Achievement Award in Toronto for her literary work.

Becky Boling is Professor of Spanish at Carleton College. Her teaching interests include Women Writers in Latin American, Latin American Drama, Novels of Revolution and Dictatorship, and Recent Trends in Latin American Narrative: Testimony and Pop Culture. Her research focuses on both contemporary Latin American narrative and theater with a strong interest in women’s writings. She has published on authors such as Mayra Montero, Carlos Fuentes, Gabriel García Márquez, Luisa Valenzuela, and Griselda Gambaro.

Patrick Dove is Associate Professor of Spanish in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese at the University of Indiana, Bloomington. He specializes in twentieth-century Latin American literature. He is the author of The Catastrophe of Modernity: Tragedy and the Nation in Latin American Literature.

Jennifer Duprey is Assistant Professor at Rutgers University-Newark and member of the graduate faculty in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese at Rutgers New Brunswick. Her areas of teaching and research are nineteenth to twenty-first century Spanish and Catalan literature, history, and culture, and their transatlantic relations with Latin America and the Hispanic Caribbean. Her recent work is located at the intersections of the tradition of Catalan theater and particular instantiations of the dialectics of Katherine Ford is Assistant Professor of Spanish at East Carolina University. She specializes in modern Latin American literature, concentrating on Latin American theater and performance of the twentieth century with a special focus on Cuba and Argentina. Her current research is centered on the use of violence in theater and performance and how this intersects with the social and political ramifications that characterize the moments in which the plays are written and produced. She is also interested in the use of ancient Greek plays in modern Latin American and Latino Theater.

Moira Fradinger is Associate Professor of Comparative Literature at Yale University. Her research and teaching interests include South American, Caribbean and European fiction, film and intellectual history. She is the author of Binding Violence: Literary Visions of Political Origins, and is currently working on a second book-length project on the Latin American rewritings of Antigone, with the working title “Pan-American Antigones.” She has two other projects in progress: a study of Latin American cinema in the sixties, and a study of the anarchist imagination, focusing on anarchist journals produced on both sides of the Atlantic at the beginning of the twentieth century.

Juan Herrero-Senés is Assistant Professor of Spanish at the University of Colorado-Boulder. He is the author of Benjamín Jarnés: escenas junto a la muerte; El nihilismo. Disolución y proliferación en la modernidad; and La inocencia del devenir. La vida como obra de arte según F. Nietzsche y O. Wilde. His area of research and teaching interest is Spanish Literature of the first half of the twentieth century, with special focus on the period between the two world wars. His research interests are avant-garde and high modernist culture in Spain, its relationship with Europe and America, as well as the connections between literature and the other arts.

Jordi Ibáñez Fanés is Professor of Aesthetics and Theory in the Department of Humanities at the Universitat Pompeu Fabra in Barcelona. He is the author of the essays Antígona y el duelo: una reflexión moral sobre la memoria histórica and La lupa de Beckett. He has also published the novel Una vida al carrer. His research interests are the aesthetics ideas of modernity and their transformation in the contemporary world.

Jordi Malé i Pegueroles is Professor of Catalan Literature at the University of Lleida. His areas of teaching and research interests are contemporary literature, both in the field of creation and history, as well as literary criticism. He has published editions of Pere Calders and Carles Riba; articles on Josep Pla, Maríà Manent, Joan Brossà, Antoni Rubió i Lluch, Jordi Rubió i Balaguer, Carles Riba, Jesús Moncada and Jordi Coca, among other authors; and monographs on Josep Carner and Carles Riba. He is the main researcher of the Grup de Recerca Aula Màrius Torres (Generalitat de Catalunya). He is the author of the novel Partida final (1996) and translator of the play L’amant by Harold Pinter.

Inês Alves Mendes Páez is a full-time researcher at the Catholic University in Lisbon, where she has been developing collaborative work on modernity, namely on the visual aspects of female consumption and cosmopolitanism in the 1920s and 30s in Portugal and Spain. She is also a member of the international project “The Reception of British and Irish Short Fiction in Portugal and Portuguese Short Fiction in the United Kingdom and Ireland (1980–2010)”. Her research interests include the representation of women in Portuguese culture and literature in the twentieth century, as well as theater, gender and canon formation.

Ashley Puig-Herz is Visiting Assistant Professor of Spanish at Bryn Mawr College. She received her Ph.D. in Romance Studies from Cornell University. Her dissertation, “Imagining Catalonia After 1898: Cuban-Catalan Relations in the 20th and 21st Centuries,” shows how the relationship between Cuba and Catalonia has survived beyond colonialism into contemporary literature and arts. Her research and teaching interests include modern and contemporary Iberian, Cuban, and Cuban-American Literatures and Cultures; Catalan Studies; Film; Arabic Language and Arab Communities in Spain.

William Viestenz is Assistant Professor in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese and the Institute for Global Studies at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, where he specializes in twentieth and twenty-first century Iberian literature and culture. He is the author of By the Grace of God: Francoist Spain and the Sacred Roots of Political Imagination and co-editor, with Joan Ramon Resina, of The New Ruralism: An Epistemology of Transformed Space. He is currently at work on a co-edited volume with Kata Beilin titled Debates on the Ethics of Life in Contemporary Spain and on a second book-length project investigating biopolitics and sovereignty in twentieth and twenty-first-century Spain. He is an Associate Editor of Hispanic Issues.

Brenda Werth is Associate Professor of Spanish at American University. She specializes in contemporary Latin American theater and Southern Cone studies. She is the author of Theatre, Performance, and Memory Politics in Argentina. Her areas of interest include postdictatorial literary and cultural production (in particular, theatre and film), memory and performance studies, and reception theory. She has published articles on unresolved mourning, the legacy of national icons, and the relationship between metadrama and media in contemporary Argentine theatre. She is currently working on a book project entitled “Dramatic Interventions: Performance and Memory Politics in Contemporary Argentine Theatre.”